Executive Summary

The Indigenous Recruitment and Retention Action Plan (Action Plan) will support the Indigenous Recruitment and Retention Framework's (Framework) two main goals:

- to increase Indigenous Representation, and
- to support Indigenous Leadership Opportunities.

To reach these goals, this Action Plan sets out objectives and deliverables to improve Indigenous peoples' success within the recruitment process and within the organization as a whole. Each department and Agency must work together and share the responsibility for these objectives and deliverables through the development of unique Indigenous Employment Plans that will guide the way to reaching the Framework and Action Plan's vision and goals.

The success of the Framework and Action Plan will require regular monitoring and evaluation. Through continuous monitoring and evaluation, all stakeholders and partners can have a shared understanding of common goals and responsibilities, and an ability to identify and celebrate successes.

Setting the Context

Indigenous under-representation in the public service is a complex and multi-dimensional issue, which will require a variety of actions to improve, from policy initiatives to programs, trainings to resources. A collaborative approach that requires participation from every Department and Agency will be essential if meaningful changes are to be made.

The Department of Finance released the Indigenous Recruitment and Retention Framework (Framework), which is intended to support GNWT efforts of building a workforce that is representative of the population it serves. By developing business practices that include recruitment and retention strategies, the Framework and this Action Plan will empower departments to recognize the importance of Indigenous perspectives within their policies, programs, and services. By providing the tools to develop detailed implementation plans, the Framework and Action Plan will support departments as they incorporate these invaluable Indigenous perspectives into their teams at all levels.

The Framework encompasses and supports existing GNWT programs designed to recruit and retain Indigenous employees. In addition, to enhance using current programs, the Framework has two main goals:

- to increase Indigenous Representation, and
 - to support Indigenous Leadership opportunities.

Moving from Framework to Action Plan

This Action Plan builds off the Indigenous Recruitment and Retention Framework (Framework), which sets forth a shared vision and two overarching goals for Indigenous representation in the GNWT workforce. In addition, two priorities were identified for each of the goals. Together, they provide four distinct priority areas, which help to identify the most important work the GNWT can do to fully realize the shared vision of the Framework.

Our Shared Vision

We believe in a public service where the Indigenous people of the Northwest Territories are valued team members at all levels of government and across all departments, where they are genuinely included, celebrated, and given opportunities to succeed.

We believe in an anti-racist public service, where employees are educated to acknowledge their privilege and question their beliefs about why Indigenous people are underrepresented in the public service. We believe in a public service that is diverse and inclusive, that learns from its mistakes and collaborates both internally and externally with Indigenous peoples.

We believe in a public service that advocates for the rights of our Indigenous peoples and that yields positions of power to under-represented groups.

Our Shared Goals

Indigenous Representation

The GNWT Public Service is representative of the population it serves. Departments and Agencies recognize and incorporate Indigenous perspectives into their policies, programs, and services.

Indigenous employees view the Public Service as an organization that accepts, supports and provides opportunities for advancement.

Efforts to increase Indigenous representation in the GNWT are largely focused on recruitment strategies. Equally as important is fostering an environment and culture that is welcoming and inclusive of Indigenous employees. There are many barriers that have been identified that contribute to lower Indigenous recruitment and retention, and different approaches to Indigenous representation must be considered to begin to address them all. This means that blanket statements cannot be made about how Indigenous representation should be achieved.

Indigenous Leadership

Indigenous representation in the GNWT Public Service is achieved at all levels of government and across all Departments and Agencies.

Indigenous employees have access to and are part of the decision-making process that impact the Public Service and the population of the NWT.

It is not enough for the GNWT to recruit and retain Indigenous employees, we must also commit to developing and promoting Indigenous employees into positions of leadership, so that their voices are heard at decision-making tables at all levels of the government. A one-size-fits-all approach will not work for improving Indigenous leadership in the public service. Rather, ever-evolving approaches to Indigenous employee development and succession planning will be necessary.

All Departments, Agencies and employees at all levels need to embrace the goals of representativity and Indigenous leadership. We all share the responsibility to contribute to changing the way we think, the way we perceive the workplace, the way we act and what we believe.

Our Shared Commitment

To reach these goals, we have set out the following objectives and deliverables to help Indigenous people to succeed within the recruitment process and within the organization as a whole.

The success of this initiative depends on the entire GNWT sharing the responsibility of achieving its goals. Each Department and Agency will be required to create an Indigenous Employment Plan to address the objectives outlined within, using statistics and a labour force statistical analysis to set realistic benchmarks for success. Each department and agency will have their own unique Indigenous Employment Plan that will guide the way to reaching the Framework's vision and goals.

Navigating the Journey Ahead

The Indigenous Recruitment and Retention Action Plan envisions policy initiatives as well as development of programs, training and resources to address the barriers that have been identified.

Policy initiatives help to explain how visions and goals can be turned into reality. Developing appropriate policies, guidelines and procedures can influence the way the GNWT approaches Indigenous representation and can ensure identified barriers are addressed.

Specific programs can help to match Indigenous applicants and employees with opportunities, with the aim of increasing Indigenous representation and leadership.

Interactive training can help to shift attitudes and culture in the workplace, leading participants to question their privilege and to think critically about some of the beliefs and perceptions that they have.

Targeted resources will inform applicants, employees, and the public about the initiatives being put in place and raise awareness of the GNWT's commitment to achieving the Framework's vision and goals. These resources will help foster a diverse, open and anti-racist culture within the GNWT and equip Indigenous applicants and employees with the skills, knowledge, tools and confidence to excel.

The success of Indigenous applicants and employees in the GNWT depends on proposing diverse approaches to dismantle the variety of barriers that were identified in the Framework. These four approaches reflect the actions, knowledge, attitudes, environments, and beliefs that are needed to ensure efforts to achieve Indigenous Representation and Leadership in the GNWT are successful.

Monitoring & Evaluating our Progress

What is Monitoring and Evaluation?

Monitoring is the regular collection of information about the activities of a program.

Evaluation is the assessment of a program to know if it is accomplishing its goals and to reflect on the lessons learned.

Monitoring and Evaluation is a tool that can be used to measure the success of programs intended to improve the recruitment and retention of Indigenous candidates, understand how to improve every year, and ensure that the right people, organizations and departments are involved to help develop Indigenous Employment Plans.

Commitment to the Indigenous Recruitment and Retention Framework requires all stakeholders and partners to have a shared understanding of common goals and responsibilities. Part of knowing how things are going is achieved through the appropriate collection, analysis and reporting of data and information. This provides partners with an avenue to identify and share successes in Indigenous Representation and Indigenous Leadership within the GNWT Public Service

This Framework will be supported by a logic model, a performance measurement plan, and an evaluation framework. These documents and measurements will provide qualitative and quantitative data, which will be used in the ongoing monitoring and evaluation and will include short, medium, and long-term targets. The monitoring and evaluation process will allow for identification of continuous improvement needs and to create effective changes to the action plan where needed.
