

IDENTIFICATION

Department	Position Title
Aboriginal Affairs and Intergovernmental Relations	Expert Advisor, Implementation
Position Number	Community	Division/Region
11-14413	Yellowknife	Implementation/HQ

PURPOSE OF THE POSITION

Reporting to the Director, Implementation, the Expert Advisor, Implementation provides expert advice, including broad policy and strategic advice, guidance, analysis, interpretation and information on the content and ongoing implementation of constitutionally protected treaties, intergovernmental agreements, financing agreements and implementation plans between the federal, territorial and Aboriginal governments, and on the negotiation of implementation-related provisions where these agreements are currently under active negotiation. The position is also responsible for the periodic re-negotiation of implementation plans, financing agreements, and other intergovernmental agreements and arrangements utilized in the ongoing implementation of treaties.

The position is responsible for monitoring the completion or ongoing fulfillment of the GNWT's legal obligations under constitutionally protected treaties, intergovernmental agreements and financing agreements and for the completion of activities under implementation plans where a territorial responsibility or liaison role has been identified. In doing so, the position fosters and maintains positive intergovernmental relations with Aboriginal governments and the federal government. The position also monitors and advises on the completion or ongoing fulfillment of federal and Aboriginal government obligations under these agreements.

The Expert Advisor, Implementation ensures that, in re-negotiating and implementing implementation plans, financing agreements, intergovernmental agreements and arrangements, and in implementing treaties, the GNWT's negotiating mandates, policies, and strategic goals and objectives are respected and that resulting agreements and implementation arrangements reflect the direction, perspectives and interests set out in these documents.

The Expert Advisor, Implementation is called upon to provide advice, guidance, analysis, interpretation and information to all GNWT Departments including central agencies, as well as crown corporations.

SCOPE

Located in Yellowknife, the Expert Advisor, Implementation provides advice and analysis directly to the Director, Implementation, the Deputy Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Intergovernmental Relations and, where necessary to the Deputy Ministers' Committee on Aboriginal Rights or the Minister. The position is also responsible for the provision of expert advice, guidance and analysis to senior government officials, including directors, regional superintendents, chief executive officers and, where appropriate, assistant deputy ministers and deputy ministers, on the content and implementation of constitutionally-protected treaties, intergovernmental agreements and arrangements, financing agreements and implementation plans.

The effective fulfillment of the Department's mandate and the GNWT's obligations under existing constitutionally-protected treaties, financing agreements and other intergovernmental agreements and arrangements requires close cooperation with divisions within the Department, with other GNWT departments, Aboriginal governments/organizations and the federal government. Positive and mutually beneficial interdepartmental and intergovernmental relations contribute significantly to the cooperative and collaborative implementation of treaties and agreements.

The Expert Advisor, Implementation is responsible for monitoring the implementation of existing constitutionally-protected treaties and intergovernmental agreements and the completion by GNWT program departments and central agencies of GNWT obligations under these agreements. This includes monitoring the completion of activities that may be set out in implementation plans, including pre-effective date plans, as well as advising on how initiatives, projects or other actions initiated by departments may be undertaken in a manner that respects and is consistent with both the provisions and the spirit and intent of agreements. The position also monitors the completion of federal and Aboriginal government obligations and reports on progress in the overall implementation of agreements.

When providing advice, the Expert Advisor, Implementation must consider, analyze and interpret information from a wide variety of sources beyond just the specific provisions of the agreement and must take into consideration factors such as the intergovernmental relationship between the GNWT and its treaty partners, the mandates, policies and strategic goals and objectives of the GNWT, direction provided by the Deputy Ministers' Committee on Aboriginal Rights and the implementation history of the agreement in question and of other similar agreements in the NWT. The position has latitude in developing options and making recommendations on alternatives that best meet the interests of specific departments or central agencies and the GNWT broadly, and which are fair and equitable in their treatment of NWT Aboriginal governments.

The Expert Advisor, Implementation leads and/or participates on intergovernmental and interdepartmental working groups comprised of senior managers and advisors, and legal counsel as required, which are convened periodically to advance implementation initiatives or affect the resolution of implementation-related issues. The position participates in collaborative development and assessment of issues and options, providing expert advice on GNWT obligations under existing agreements, and representing GNWT interests and views as required, depending upon the composition and mandate of the working group.

The Expert Advisor, Implementation leads the re-negotiation of implementation plans, financing agreements, intergovernmental agreements and arrangements utilized in the on-going implementation of treaties and is responsible for the negotiating team, which may include: senior managers representing GNWT departments and central agencies, legal counsel and a senior policy advisor. Conflict is inherent in the function of negotiating, particularly where negotiations relate to the allocation of scarce resources and the implementation of rights-based agreements. The pressure of negotiating in this climate can add significant tension to negotiations. In representing the GNWT, the Expert Advisor, Implementation is required to conduct themselves with a high level of professionalism and diplomacy. When leading the re-negotiation of these agreements, the incumbent has a significant amount of latitude provided that the mandates, policies and guidelines of the GNWT are complied with.

In re-negotiating implementation plans, financing agreements, and intergovernmental agreements and arrangements, the Expert Advisor, Implementation is responsible for: identifying implementation issues and obstacles; developing and tabling options to affect their resolution; identifying gaps in existing mandates; and recommending the development of new mandates or the revision of existing mandates to address gaps.

The Expert Advisor, Implementation, in consultation with the Director, Implementation and other senior departmental officials, and with input from GNWT negotiating team members, determines strategies to achieve desired outcomes. The re-negotiation of various types of agreements with different Aboriginal governments, each with its own treaty, unique implementation history and intergovernmental relationship makes the re-negotiation of agreements varied and unique. Based on these different variables, the Expert Advisor, Implementation must be able to come up with constructive ideas and creative solutions and decisions that address the parties' interests. General instructions are channeled directly to the position from the Director, Implementation. Other work is assigned verbally or in writing. Negotiating instructions and mandates may require the approval of Cabinet, which also provides direction. Unusual or unprecedented situations are discussed with the Director and Deputy Minister.

The tact, diplomacy, professionalism and discretion needed for effective negotiations is also required when implementing constitutionally protected treaties, intergovernmental agreements, financing agreements and implementation plans, in order to develop and maintain the positive and mutually beneficial intergovernmental and interdepartmental relationships necessary for ongoing cooperation and collaboration.

Incorrect advice, guidance or recommendations put forward by the Expert Advisor, Implementation in re-negotiating implementation plans, financing agreements and other intergovernmental agreements or in advising Departmental and GNWT senior management or the Minister on the implementation of constitutionally-protected agreements could result in:

- political backlash from the Aboriginal government, federal government or other affected parties
- damaging of intergovernmental relationships, and interdepartmental relationships
- considerable embarrassment for the Minister and the Executive Council
- the initiation of legal action against the GNWT for failing to uphold its legal obligations
- the setting of precedents that are not favourable or desirable from a GNWT perspective
- considerable conflict at negotiations and delays in concluding agreements
- incurring unnecessary one-time costs or ongoing costs to the GNWT, particularly where multi-year financing or funding agreements are being negotiated

RESPONSIBILITIES

1. Provides expert advice, including broad policy and strategic advice, guidance, analysis, and interpretation on the content and ongoing implementation of constitutionally-protected treaties, intergovernmental agreements, financing agreements and implementation plans between the federal, territorial and Aboriginal governments, and on the negotiation of implementation-related provisions for agreements that are currently under active negotiation.

WORKING CONDITIONS

Physical Demands

The incumbent spends significant time sitting at a desk and sitting at boardroom tables for lengthy periods. However, the incumbent has the opportunity to move about the office or boardroom. The incumbent is likely to work irregular hours. Negotiating sessions and committee meetings regularly involve working hours beyond the normal 7.5 hours per day.

The incumbent is expected to work irregular or long hours and work on weekends when required, which can often place a high degree of stress on the incumbent's health and family situation.

Environmental Conditions

The incumbent works in a generally comfortable work environment. The incumbent works in a closed office. Frequent travel (an average of one trip every 2 – 3 months or more frequently when negotiating, of on average 3 – 5 days duration is to be expected) within the NWT and occasionally to southern Canada is an element of the job.

Sensory Demands

The incumbent spends a lot of time attending and participating (or leading) meetings and participating in or leading the discussion on behalf of the GNWT. The incumbent is exposed to demands of high concentration during difficult, and sometimes, confrontational meetings and negotiations.

As the GNWT's representative, the incumbent may become the focus of the other party's frustrations with everything the GNWT is doing or not doing. As the GNWT's representative in these situations, the incumbent will face significant stress and pressure to act and respond to such challenges in an appropriate way and displaying tact, diplomacy, and a high level of professionalism.

When re-negotiating implementation plans, financing agreements, and intergovernmental agreements, the position also states GNWT's positions at negotiations, at times to the disappointment and displeasure of the other parties at negotiations. The incumbent will be the other parties' focus for disappointment and criticism when GNWT mandates, perspectives or expectations do not align with the other parties' mandates. The incumbent will face significant pressure to accept the positions of the other parties. These situations can result in a high level of stress. Adding to this stress is the need to respond, often in the 'heat' of negotiations or discussions. Tact, diplomacy, and a high level of professionalism and discretion are needed at all times.

The incumbent spends a fair amount of time sitting at a desk, writing and reviewing proposals, preparing reports, conducting research and analysis and communicating via electronic mail and over the phone. This can result in eye strain and other physical discomforts.

Mental Demands

The incumbent is exposed to tight deadlines and a large workload with competing priorities and demands. Contact with federal and Aboriginal government representatives and negotiators during committee meetings and negotiating sessions that can become tense and sometimes volatile requires extensive tact and diplomacy and the ability to think clearly in stressful situations. In extreme circumstances the incumbent must be able to manage and deal with criticism and insults directed at the incumbent personally. These situations are extremely stressful.

Following implementation committee meetings, working group meetings and negotiating sessions, the incumbent must be able to 'digest', or 'deconstruct', assess, and summarize the session or meeting, and assess their own performance where appropriate.

Successfully implementing agreements and concluding the re-negotiation of implementation plans, financing agreements and intergovernmental agreements in timely manner is directly related to the effectiveness of the incumbent in developing and maintaining constructive and collaborative intergovernmental and interdepartmental relationships at Implementation Committees and negotiating parties and

This is a demanding job, one which the incumbent will face criticism, frustration, as well as enjoying the satisfaction and sense of accomplishment that results from successfully concluding an agreement.
