WORKING CONDITIONS

Physical Demands

There is a combination of field and office work.

Physical effort is required to access and retrieve body and body parts approximately 40 to 50 times per year for about 5 hours per occurrence. With assistance, lift and carry deceased persons from the death scene. If necessary, prepare the deceased for transportation by placing the deceased in a shipping container.

The incumbent will be required to search scenes and handle evidence which may include severed body parts. Scenes include houses, commercial buildings, industrial settings, roadways, highways, lakes, rivers, and remote wilderness in all forms of weather and seasons. Evidence exhibits may include large cumbersome objects.

External Examinations must be completed on human remains, which require lifting, pulling and pushing to turn human remains onto their side or onto their back/frontside. This is done either alone or with the assistance of another person, human remains can be heavy. While working at the scene or morgue the incumbent must be able to lift, stretch, and pull and push remains and must be able to stand for long periods of time without sitting.

Human remains are often flown into Yellowknife for shipment to Edmonton. The Coroner is required to ensure that these remains are transported, which may include the lifting of remains and shipping containers.

Environmental Conditions

There could be exposure to communicable diseases, bodily fluids, strong foul odors, decomposing bodies or body parts in various states of decay multiple times per year. Investigations will be performed in all weather conditions. The incumbent is frequently required to travel on small aircraft, helicopters or boats to reach remote death scenes.

Death investigations will be performed in all weather conditions in remote environments on land or ice. Primitive sleeping accommodations may be provided, from a tent to the floor of an RCMP detachment.

Sensory Demands

The incumbent will be required to use the combined senses of touch, sight, and smell throughout an investigation.

Mental Demands

The incumbent will be exposed to graphic details of death and be expected to be called out at any time of the day or night. This may cause a significant disruption to the incumbent's family and social life. The incumbent is expected to be on-call 24 hours a day for approximately a third of the year and is expected to travel to a death scene on very short notice.

The incumbent will be required to remain calm, professional and supportive to individuals who are emotionally distraught. Some families can be very aggressive, potentially abusive, volatile or in crisis, raising questions about personal safety.
